There's no denying that people were shocked at the news that Denver Broncos star Tim Tebow had turned down an endorsement deal from Gatorade – which was invented at his alma matter, University of Florida – in favor of one from FRS Healthy Energy. Described as a "healthy alternative to traditional energy drinks," FRS is the only drink on the market to use quercetin (a naturally occurring antioxidant originally used to give energy to cancer patients) as its main ingredient. It's also formulated with green tea extracts and has B complex vitamins, as well as vitamins C and E.

LA Lakers' Derek Fisher is also a fan, as well as famed cyclist Lance Armstrong, who has been credited as the first person to put the product on the map.
